POLITICAL PULL

By Hal E. Roach. ✓

Ambrose Spat has been promised a political job, and to celebrate the event he announces the fact that the Governor is coming to dinner - at which time he will receive his official notification. The Governor's secretary who has plans of his own sends another in place of the Governor whose sole desire is to induce the Spats to invest money in one of his promoting schemes.

All goes well and Ambrose who has cheerfully signed on the dotted line gets a very severe shock when a telephone call originating from the Capitol informs the listener, Ambrose's brother-in-law, that the Governor regrets that he cannot be present at the dinner. The disclosure of course brings about the result that the impostor has gained his ends and the alleged position was nothing else but a ^{bogus} stock certificate. The impostor's exit was anything but a laughable one. •
